

Elisabetta Ursella was born in Italy where she graduated in graphic design and advertising at the Istituto Statale d'Arte "G. Sello", Udine. For the last fifteen years she has freelanced as an illustrator and graphic designer.

Ms Ursella has illustrated a number of children books, working among others for La Scuola, Brescia. She has also served as an art education consultant for local education authorities.

She has published satirical vignettes in several periodicals. In 2000, she was awarded by Kofi Annan an Honorable Mention at the United Nations Ranan Lurie Political Cartoon Award.

She has designed children educational and information material for various public institutions, including the European Union and Italian Regional Offices for the Environment.

Ms Ursella has visited Britain several times in the near past, working among others for The Medici Society, London. She now lives and works between Italy and the UK due to family reasons.
